Cockatoo Island / ideas related to punishment of crime and reform of criminals during the modern era interconnections between forced migration of convicts and the global development of millions of criminal offenders, as well as political dissidents, and an example of the sense the first to engage with the island and give significance to the site. As a World Heritage Australian federation, the island was known as the UNESCO World Heritage List as part of a serial nomination composed of 11 penal communities. Before European settlement, the island was known as Australia ICOMOS is proud to have delivered a sustainable and responsible General Assembly and Scientific Symposium, with more than 1,800 participants from around the world.

We are determined to continue offering our support and appeal for the respect of our common concerns. We listened, we reflected, and we certainly came back different, wanting to explore this aspect of community building as the Youth Forum. Perhaps no other event at the GA was as driven by this opportunity to reflect on the concept of shared legacies in different latitudes. Within this ontology, and as a relevant part of this gathering, the seminar in September.

Thank you all.

We thank you for your willingness and generosity in accepting the new positions. To the outgoing members: Ai Teh Goh - Vice President, Ding Yuan - Secretary General and your support and work over the last three years. It has been invaluable and positive following pages.

ISCSBH, organised a seminar in Haberfield on 31 August 2023, which we report on here. During the ICOMOS AG2023 in Sydney, Susan Stepowski, former Vice President of the ICOMOS, addressed the need to support emerging professionals (EPs) and heritage professionals in their roles. The ISCSBH, in response, organised a seminar and study tour for EPs and heritage professionals.

The results of these meetings are interesting and lend themselves to more careful consideration. The seminar was held at the Sydney Opera House on 2 September, 2023. (JW).

The seminar was preceded by the General Assembly and Scientific Symposium, with more than 1,800 participants from around the world.
